Math:

Next week students will identify the names and characteristics of quadrangles; compare and contrast characteristics of 3-dimensional shapes; construct pyramids and explore the relationship among number of faces, edges, and vertices in pyramids; and find lines of symmetry in objects.

Students will also participate in Holiday Math Centers and games on Friday.

Reading Workshop:

Next week students will read and learn about all the different holidays during December. We will focus on Hanukkah,, Christmas, and Feliz Navidad.

Students will also participate in a variety of activities to practice this skill and review previously taught skills.

If you ever have any questions please feel free to write me a note, leave me a voice message, or email me at telepola@dhsd7.net.

Have a great weekend,
Mrs. Telepo

Grammar:

Next week we will review and practice grammar skills we have discussed so far this year by doing holiday related activities.

Writer's Workshop:

In writer's workshop next week we will continue to draft our fractured fairy tales and begin the revising and editing process.

Social Studies:

Next week students will be finishing up our Landforms books. If time allows, we will also learn why people change Earth and identify ways in which people change Earth. They will also identify ways people protect the Earth and recognize ways people can conserve and replenish natural resources.

Science:

Next week students will learn and discuss how colors change when mixed and use chromatography to separate black and green inks into their component colors.

Holiday Party: The Holiday Party will be on Friday, December 19. A note came home this week in your child's Everyday Folder.

Book Exchange: A note also was sent home regarding an optional book exchange. If your child wishes to participate in this he/she will need to bring in a new book (no more than $5.00) that would be appropriate for a girl or boy in second grade.
